CHAIRMAN'S MESSAGE:

Thank you to all people that helped with the PEASOUP & PANCAKE supper. For those who left early, you missed the Danish Dessert and cakes and cupcakes. We also thank those members who contributed. Henry Hjersman had an excellent slide show of the Vikings. We can certainly see how the many handicrafts have been handed down to our generation.

Bea Dillard, Arlie and I checked out and cleaned out our many cupboards at the Lodge Hall. We have plenty of supplies for future meetings.

We have excellent dinners and refreshments, and our Cultural Leader's programs are outstanding. I hope to lead an efficient and short as possible meeting. We need business meetings to coordinate all our many activities.

This has been a learning process for me this past month. I helped assemble the Newsletter, cooked peasoup, taught folk dances to the Children's Club and checked our supplies. Believe me this is a real education.

In Truth & Unity,

Ruth Veis, Chairman

MARCH DATES _ (CONTINUED)

4 & 5 Camellia Festival - Monitor will have a display booth at the Camellia Festival Flower show at the Sacramento Convention Center. It will be featuring the province of Dalarna. An 8 foot Dala Hest will be the backdrop with the table displays of other Dalarna artifacts - orange horses, wood chickens, textiles etc. If you have any items from Dalarna that you could loan to the committee for display please contact Diedre Dahlberg or Arlie Veis. Thanks to the enthusiastic response at our last meeting we have the booth manned for all the open hours. Some help in set up and take down will be appreciated. Our Children's Club will be performing at 3:30 on Saturday the 4th on the stage in the ethnic display area. Come down and support Monitor's effort.

John Ericsson - (again)

In 1844 John Ericsson declared he would never do anything further for the U.S. Navy. This was the result of the shabby treatment by Lt. Robert Stockton who attempted to shift the blame for the gun explosion on the USS Princeton. Stockton saw to it that Ericsson was not paid for his work for the Navy. It was many years later during the Civil War that Ericsson relented and aided the Navy by designing the "Monitor" and with many other inventions.

However, even if Ericsson had not done this, his invention of the screw propeller would still have had a revolutionary effect on the Navy. It was the Navy that recognized the value of the screw propeller which was less vulnerable to attack than the paddle wheel which had been in use. The screw propeller also permitted engines to be placed below the water line for greater protection. Until this the Navy had relied on wooden sailing ships. The wind was free and clean. Some sailing ships remained in use in the Navy until the 1890s.

While the wind was free it was also undependable. Steam permitted flexibility and maneuverability but also required new skills and, most important, supply of coal and boiler water. This involved a new auxilliary, the collier, and also coaling stations. America's colonial expansion to Hawaii, Samoa, Guam and the Philippines resulted in large part from need for coaling stations in the Pacific.

There were some captains who objected. Coal was an expense. Coal was dirty, coaling was arduous work and soot made it difficult to keep the decks clean. They could not remain at sea for months and even years as they had done in the days of Decatur, Porter and Wilkes when it was important to show the flag of the new country in many ports. Many ships had sails in addition to steam and used favorable winds to save fuel.

Progress was inevitable both in the U.S. Navy and in foreign navies. The first ironclad steam ships with the screw propeller evolved into the destroyers, cruisers, and battleships of the modern Navy. Tonnage, armor, and armament increased, oil, and even nuclear power replaced coal as fuel, all still depend on John Ericsson's invention, the screw propeller.
